Don't miss your chance for grant funding!

Give proposals a thorough edit before submission. Don't turn in your first draft—there's a reason it's called a draft. Editing is a process. Your second version is an edited version of the first draft, and so on. Continue making improvements along the way. And don't rely on spell check! It's great for some things, but not everything. It doesn't always catch typos or grammatical errors, and it won't find or correct punctuation errors. Spell check also does not correct math errors. So review your budget carefully, and make sure the numbers match those in your proposal narrative.
